Three World Religions

There were three religions widely practiced during the time of the Ottoman Empire, and they are still practiced today. They are Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. These three monotheistic religions count half the world's population as followers. Listed below are statements that relate to either Judaism, Christianity, or Islam. Before each statement are the letters "J," which represents Judaism, "C," which represents Christianity, and "I," which represents Islam. Circle the letter to which the statement refers. Some statements may refer to more than one religion. You may have to do some research to find the answers.
